

Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary days before the election is a clear example of the dangers of media consolidation -- an incredibly scary example. I am certain I would feel this way regardless of which side took such an action.

Sinclair uses the public airwaves free of charge, and is obligated by law to serve the public interest. This is not being done for the public's interest or well-being; it is an example of someone exerting power in order to retain that power, with ethics not even playing a minor role. When large companies control the airwaves, we get more of what's good for the bottom line and less of what we need for our democracy. Instead of something produced at "News Central" far away, it's more important that we see real people from our own communities and more substantive news about issues that matter.

Sinclair's actions show why we need to strengthen media ownership rules, not weaken them. They show why the license renewal process needs to involve more than a returned postcard. Please protect our country. Thank you.
